It's believed that Tudor Istrolid was manufactured for a customer of British Motor Corporation, then named Associated Motor Cycles. However, before any of that happened, we learned that this company was owned by Duarte Lacy and Carl Israel. They ran another Harley-Davidson brand, Alvarez, which they had since 2002 when they formed the company. As of 2016, they own two Harley-Davidson dealerships in Southern California. Heritage - Harley-Davidson Heritage Collection Istrolid was first introduced at the 2015 motorcycle show at the same time it was already announced that the Istrolid bike would be part of the Harley-Davidson Heritage Collection. At the same show, a prototype Istrolid reproduction was unveiled. This bike, intended for production in late 2015, will carry either the current 130-kilowatt engine or the new 116-kilowatt, liquid-cooled powerplant due to go into production in 2016.

Our Istrolid video brings you to the prototype shown in 2015 at the L.A. show. Obviously, the one you see in the video is the only one produced and never put into production.
