Robert Heald Sir Robert Heald (- 17 November 1792) was an English ironmaster and Member of Parliament. Heald was the son of Constantine Heald and succeeded his uncle Henry Heald as owner of the ironworks at Kettlethorpe, near Sleaford, Lincolnshire. Heald became an ironmaster and was knighted in 1775. He was appointed Custos Rotulorum of Lincolnshire from 1777 to 1779. Heald was involved with the Lunar Society and with horticulture. He was a horticulturalist and tenant farmer on land known as The Holme, near Sleaford. He joined The Society for the Improvement of Public Taste which was established in 1791 and also became a Chelsea Physic Garden Trustee. He founded four horticultural societies and was a huge fan of growing plants in the garden at The Holme. He was a successful gardener and commissioned a landscape gardener from the Isle of Wight John Emes to produce a horticultural plan. Heald was described as having a great deal of spirit and a great deal of luck. He received several tickets for art galleries and archaeological antiquities.

More specifically, the present invention relates to a direct backlight unit that can realize high brightness and high uniformity thereof, and a display device including the same. 2. Description of the Related Art Recently, flat display devices have been widely used because of their small sizes and light weights, as the most important technology for future portable computers. In particular, since the liquid crystal display (LCD) device is lighter and smaller, lighter and lower power, and is more portable, it has been increasing in popularity. The backlight unit of the LCD device irradiates light from the back surface to the front surface. The backlight unit includes a light source, a light guide plate that guides light output from the light source, and so on. Recently, light emitting diodes (LEDs) have been used as the light source of the backlight unit. The backlight unit of the LCD device generates intense heat. The heat increases the temperature of the LCD device and the components thereof, which leads to deterioration of the lifespan of the display device. To solve this problem, a conventional LCD device includes a heat sink that dissipates heat generated by the light source. The heat sink is attached to a side or back surface of the backlight unit, and thereby dissipates heat. As a result, the overall size of the LCD device increases. The conventional LCD device also has a problem that the heat generated by the light source cannot be dissipated completely. In addition, a conventional LCD device also has a problem that the overall size of the LCD device increases.Q: Android - Retrofit - not all response returned Hello all I'm using retrofit 2 and as I need a little bit more detailed output from my server response is getting different Here is my Java code public class exampleRetrofit { @GET("example.com/upload/
