Even before the initial reports and rumors began to swirl about the new collaborative In-N-Out Burger restaurant that would be opening in Atlanta, curious readers from across the pond started lining up to experience the burgers they're apparently known for. The first rumors about the project came in August of 2017, when CEO Lynsi Snyder told NPR that she and the In-N-Out team were looking at Atlanta, Austin, or San Diego. However, this year, the In-N-Out development office has issued a request for proposal, and they've specified that a restaurant could be open by January 2019. What's new:

The city was born half-elf and half-orc, and it never thought it would grow into such a fortified fortress. But the forces within the city still live enslaved by fear, born into discord and bitterness. Some call it "The Reverse Dragalos". All that has changed recently for the Eternal City. The elf king, Sylren Alatar, is up to his old tricks, up to no good and trying to put the entire continent of Krynn under his influence. His latest moves include a mercenary empire and an alliance with an evil devil-like fellowship to destroy the pride of the Dark Queen. There is not a mortal in the city who doesn't know this. The orcs are hoping for a last stand. Refugees from the west find their path blocked by Sylrin's mercenaries who want to take their territory. The half-orcs are reluctantly forced to attack the elves as only they know how to fight. But on the other side of the city, old legends are coming to life and the city is divided by envy. The city seems to be a failed creation by a powerful elite of the Northern Alliance, a dark, unruly, cursed half of Uldum split from the other to survive. Some day, a new power will come from this darkness. After time, the orcish and elven armies clash with the light of the first day. Some of the elves and orcs die as the sorcerers of both armies sow thickly the ground, bullets and sun, lightning and fire. Others escape, but will they live to fight a different battle some day when all these barriers have been torn down? The people of this city hope. Even the peasants beneath the shadows of its walls have hope, hope for a better tomorrow. The city is part of the Human campaign but has a separate map and it is assumed that the player is playing one of the factions included in the alternate campaign in Porous Spires of Al-Kalim. First go around, there's a lot going on but should not pose any problems for player or GM, especially with a good attitude and a little creativity. If your friend is not allowed to visit your gaming table for playing a different campaign, he will receive a copy of the "Porous Spires of Al-
