The effects of dicoumarol (1,2-bis(3,4-dimethylphenyl)1,2-dithiol-3-one) on the metabolism of arachidonic acid, cholesterol and dienic prostaglandins in the pineal gland of rats were studied. The pineals were incubated in medium containing 3H-arachidonic acid, 3H-cholesterol or 3H-prostaglandin E1. The metabolites were examined by high pressure liquid chromatography and scintillation counting. The results indicated that pineal arachidonic acid metabolites were synthesized in vitro and were accumulated from exogenous arachidonic acid. The synthesis was inhibited by dicoumarol in a dose dependent manner. The accumulation was inhibited by cyclooxygenase inhibitors and promoted by lipoxigenase inhibitors. Cholesterol and prostaglandin E1 were incorporated into the gland and their metabolism was also altered by dicoumarol. The metabolism of prostaglandin E1 was stimulated and that of cholesterol was inhibited by dicoumarol. These results indicate that dicoumarol exerts a modulatory effect on the metabolism of arachidonic acid, cholesterol and dienic prostaglandins in the pineal gland

I'm not sure why there are so many opponents to the Inclusive Paragraphs in the Marriage Equality Bill; perhaps it's due to the monstrous horror of marriage's historical maintenance of a system of inequality, where some people are expected to exchange vows to bind themselves, sexually and emotionally, to other people who may be substantially of a different, limited, or inferior, sex. (What's more, the state has an interest in doing some marriage-splicing, because, you know, married couples are supposed to marry one another, not their siblings, their friends, the person across the street, and so on, et cetera.) Or perhaps it's just that "marriage equality" is a bad slogan, and to argue against the Inclusive Paragraphs is to argue against marriage equality. But it would be much better to marry everybody, even those of more than one gender, since that would unite us in the structure of the family, and not just in the structure of our legal unions. When a marriage is between same-sex couples, the state is acknowledging this same structure, the bonds among those who marry one another. With those specific bonds in mind, it is fair, I think, to debate what particular bonds should be recognized, for instance, by the state. In my view, it's very important to recognize that marriage is not primarily about property, or even love, fidelity, and children. There are other, much more important reasons to marry, and other ways to have loving, faithful, and responsible relationships than by getting married. I bff6bb2d33
