The prevalence of synovitis in ankylosing spondylitis was examined in patients with arthritis of the knee, ankle or thumb. A questionnaire survey was conducted and sera were obtained from 125 patients with ankylosing spondylitis and matched controls without any evidence of rheumatic disease. The prevalence of arthritis was significantly higher in patients with ankylosing spondylitis than in controls. Especially, arthritis of the thumb was associated with the disease. The patients were also studied for the presence of serum rheumatoid factor (RF), immune complexes and HLA-B27. RF was found in the sera of 44% of the patients, while anti-lymphocyte antibodies were detected in 22%, and C-reactive protein (CRP) in 71%. The incidence of RF in patients with ankylosing spondylitis did not differ among those with mild, moderate or severe forms. The ratios of HLA-B27 and Bw52 to B27 were 82.3% and 54.8% in the patients with arthritis, respectively. Pokémon Go has become a sensation over the past few weeks. With their bizarrely addictive combination of "exploring" neighborhoods with augmented reality gameplay, and huddling in parks to catch Pokémon while drinking beer, it might seem to you that Pokémon Go is a digital distraction from the larger social problems that plague our lives. Pokémon Go has been met with criticism from all sides of the ideological spectrum. There's the specter of drunk teenagers being out of control in public, and people being released from jail because their phones had been confiscated. There are calls to reinstate the death penalty.
