Rigorous model for excitation-contraction dynamics of biological tissue: modelling the non-linearities. We have constructed a rigorous (Hamiltonian) model of excitation-contraction dynamics of a lumped muscle. The muscle is represented by a linear chain of active elements, which are arranged in such a way that neighbouring elements are either linked with positive stiffness or with negative stiffness, depending on the direction of the current flow in the muscle. The dynamics is described using the model equations for the internal variables of the muscle, based on a set of simple differential equations for the active element voltage and charge. This results in a non-linear "pull-chain" model, in which active elements either tend to create a pull in the first direction, or a push in the second direction, for neighbouring elements. We perform two-scale perturbation analysis of the resulting system to derive an analytical condition under which the system is excitable. Our approach provides a rigorous justification for the notion that muscle may be excitable at the level of the individual active element. This new view of excitation-contraction dynamics facilitates an analysis of the suitability of passive muscle as a synapse, and may provide insights on the way the all-or-none nature of muscle contractions emerges from non-linear interactions between excitation and contraction. Share 0 SHARES A FISH MAKEOVER REVOLUTION is set to happen in the coming months after a nationwide consultation on stripping human body parts has been announced by the government, sources close to the matter have confirmed. A referendum on whether human beings are to be mutilated will be held by the end of next month, in order for people to weigh in on whether we should be chopped up and diced to the customer's satisfaction. "I'm a firm believer that the body should be fully exposed when it comes to human rights but I would like to point out that we have moved into uncharted waters here and this referendum is very important in order for us to develop a course in human rights that we can implement for the future. Please, be very careful that
