I have a folder on my desktop labeled "Backup". I like to back up my files to a hard drive. I have an external hard drive that I plug into my pc at night. Some other things you can do are set up a cloud drive, or opt for online backup. Using a cloud drive will allow you to share your files with others that have this software. You can either do this manually or set up a schedule. Another solution is to switch to online backup services. By choosing to upload you files online you're giving the internet permission to suck up the files it can to do what it wants with it when you're not looking. This can be a very risky backup option unless you have both a strong local backup, and a backup via the internet. I looked at several websites including a lot of online backup services. Although I use the built-in back up function on my desktops they are too small to back up my external hard drive. I contacted the people who make the product and they were very helpful in trying to come up with something for me. To preview the result as you work, choose the "Preview Overlay" command from the Colorize menu. 933d7f57e6
