We're using EC2 service from Amazon, and when we launch new instances we need to provide the AWS Access Key ID and AWS Secret Access Key. Problem is that these two keys are very sensitive, we need to change them regularly, and of course it's not convenient to provide them each time we launch instance. So we want to set the key-pair as a default for new instances, and use them as the only credentials for the next instances. Is it possible? How? A: What you want to accomplish requires two things. First, you want to be able to access S3 with either of those keys. You can do that by setting your AWS Access Key ID to a temporary one and a AWS Secret Access Key that is long enough to enable you to access S3 with that temporary Access Key ID. In order to accomplish the second part of your request, you'll need to either configure the Access Key ID and Access Key that you want to use for subsequent AWS calls to be attached to an instance as an IAM user, or have a script that you run during instance creation or on instance termination that does this. A: The other answers are fine, but here's a standalone approach if you prefer: Make sure you have a KMS key, and do this: a. Enable IAM policies i. Create a policy that allows access to S3 { "Version": "2012-10-17", "Statement": [ { "Effect": "Allow", "Principal": { "AWS": "*" },
